Incidence and Clinical Implications of Emotional Perception Deficits in Veteran Patients With Chronic Pain: Findings From a Large Observational Study.

A subset of patients with chronic pain will report "emotional perception deficits" (EPDs). The purpose of this study was to (1) examine the incidence of EPDs in a large cohort of Veteran patients with chronic pain and (2) identify covariates of EPDs. Participants included 4,958 patients with chronic pain from the Veterans Health Administration (VHA). Patients with chronic pain who had two to four structured pain diaries completed were included (n = 2,795). Baseline data included clinical pain, health-related quality of life, disability and pain-related psychological constructs (anxiety, depression, and catastrophizing), and demographics. Veterans were surveyed for the presence of E
