FRAME TO GOOGLE --click to download-- THE GOOL EFFECT RAD STUDIO XE5 BUILD V.1.3..A digital camera is a type of image sensing device that can take images of subjects using an image sensor in an optical low-pass filter (OLPF). Such an OLPF converts high-frequency light energy into heat. The digital camera has an OLPF called an ND filter which is positioned in front of the image sensor. The ND filter attenuates light with a high frequency and allows light with a low frequency to pass through. The ND filter attenuates incident light and prevents diffusion and blurring caused by diffusion light. This can suppress the degradation of the image quality caused by the thermal diffusion of light to the image sensor. Such an ND filter is manufactured by applying an anti-reflection layer on an ND filter substrate. That is, the ND filter substrate is made of, for example, resin or glass, and the ND filter is formed on the substrate. The anti-reflection layer which is applied to the ND filter substrate is made of one of materials which show an anti-reflection function (e.g., titanium dioxide, titanium nitride, magnesium fluoride, and antimony). A related-art ND filter substrate is manufactured through a photolithography technique. Specifically, first, an anti-reflection layer is applied on an original plate on which a prescribed pattern is formed. Then, a thin film (e.g., resist layer) of a prescribed pattern is formed on the anti-reflection layer. By exposing, developing, and removing the resist layer, a circuit is formed on the anti-reflection layer. In the related-art photolithography technique, the anti-reflection layer is formed in advance of a resist forming step. Therefore, when there is a need to change the anti-reflection layer, it is difficult to change the anti-reflection layer. It is possible to realize a change in the anti-reflection layer by forming the anti-reflection layer on the original plate having a prescribed pattern through a vacuum film forming method such as a sputtering method and an ion plating method. However, the vacuum film forming method has difficulty in forming a pattern of the anti-reflection layer with a high aspect ratio, i.e., a

Q: Origin of "beauty pageant" I am looking to determine whether or not the phrase "beauty pageant" was coined in the 19th or 20th century. I see that there is no trace of it before 1909. The earliest example that I have found so far is Winston Churchill used the words with apparent relish in a speech in the House of Commons on Oct. 29, 1909, when he said "We are a nation that has no less than ten times the combined beauty of Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Miss Avril Paisley and Miss Toni North." Does anyone know more about it? The Internet is not particularly helpful with this sort of thing, because there is little to go on. A: A related expression to "beauty pageant" is "bargains queen". From NYTimes: The "bargains queen" was a stock character in the 1930s, played by Judy Garland or Betty Grable and Charles Winninger, or by Virginia Christine or Ann Morgan Leigh. The phrase is a play on the words "beauty" and "bargain", and goes back to at least to 1907, in which the NY Times explained the origins of the term: It was General Harrison 3e33713323
