He was the elder brother of Sir John Conway, 1st Baronet, whose portrait he etched. Life and works Conway was born in Dublin. He was the son of William Conway, and a nephew of Sir John Wyatt, 2nd Baronet. He was an amateur architect and painter, and was for some time travelling and lecturing in Edinburgh as a member of the Society of Arts. He was a prolific artist and produced miniature portraits of many noblemen, of whom all but a few were painted by John Opie. In 1820 he started a school of painting in Henry Street, Dublin, which was attended by some of the eminent painters of the day. It was described as "the most artistic school in the kingdom". He went on to teach drawing and architecture in Killarney, which is now the town of Killarney and where Conway is commemorated in the name of a public house, The Conway Hotel. He is buried at Killarney.

Murals Conway's early works include the murals in the dining room at Fitzwilliam Hall, Dublin, and drawings for the Chantrey Monument of George Alexander Stevens, R.A. and the James Stephens Memorial, Dublin. In 1828, he painted the ceiling of the Picture Gallery in Trinity College, Dublin. He also painted in the Society of Artists Room at the Royal Hibernian Academy, which was exhibited in Dublin in 1830. See also
