A delightful and proficient Google Drive application that enables you to upload, view, and edit files on your own drive. After acquisition, Google Drive is integrated into the Google Chrome browser and serves as the default file manager. The interface is visually consistent with the rest of Chrome OS, with Drive icons clearly standing out on the desktop. On the left pane, you can find the Drive dock, which shows the last opened, viewed, and edited files. On the right pane, drive contents can be searched by date, title, folder, or Google Drive website, and you can add new folders. Google Drive provides the option to copy text directly from an online web page, drag-and-drop files from other applications such as Microsoft Office, or use a digital camera to take a picture of a file. The desktop view is divided into two panes, one can be opened and closed, and the other one by clicking on the three-dotted icon to toggle. Google Drive's interface is simple, intuitive, and well designed. The interface shows a deep integration with Google services, including Google+ and Picasa. Take your favorite drive photos with Picasa, and then create a presentation with Drive. Google Drive will add it to your website; you can check out all the work with any device (Android, iOS, Windows Phone, and desktop), share individual or groups, comment on pictures, and find users by clicking through their web accounts. Do you have a Docs document with a private URL, and you'd like to allow your friends to view it? With Google Drive, you can create a Drive document that only your friends can access. After making the file private, you can share it with others by going to the "Shared with me" section from the Drive home page (for sharing, you need to be signed into Google), and enter the unique link as seen in the address bar. With the power of Google Drive, you can quickly get familiar with Chrome OS, Google services, and Google Apps. However, the interface might be a bit less straightforward than other cloud-based applications. Easy access to Drive from the internet means you have to be a bit more aware when dealing with security, and with the amount of documents that are needed to be protected, Google might have gone a bit too easy with the security aspects.
