On 14 November 2009, Autodesk announced the release of AutoCAD 2010 beta 2. This is an out-of-band release, to enable customers to take advantage of the new features before they become widely available in AutoCAD 2010. The 2010 release introduces many new features and enhancements. The primary new feature is the ability to support stereolithography (SLA), which was previously restricted to AutoCAD R14. SLA is an additive 3D printing technology, which allows the creation of new objects without the use of a standard subtractive manufacturing process. On 6 August 2012, Autodesk revealed that AutoCAD 2012 would be released in late 2011. The final release date was 19 November 2011.
