Bad Luck and Trouble, by The Outsiders, is a novel about growing up between the ages of 16-22 as a member of a minority. Rimmington Fenn is a character who is, unlike many black characters in American literature, a happy, normal man who has lived a happy, normal life. Despite this, he is unable to find a woman who will accept him for who he is. He is doomed to remain celibate. To solve his dilemma, he ventures into the murky underworld of the sexual misadventures available to him. His search for love and fulfillment is complicated by his feelings for a female friend, Jenny, who is still grieving the loss of her lesbian lover and unable to commit fully to either man or women. As he moves into his twenties, he has opportunity to marry a friend's sister, but as his eyes are opened to the realities of the adult world, he sees that marriage in any form is something to be avoided. Rimmington Fenn is not the hero of the novel. Neither is he the villain. He is a sympathetic character who is forced to make unprincipled choices. His decisions are not the easiest ones to make, and they will have major consequences on his life. This is the ultimate young adult novel. Bad Luck and Trouble is not a book that most 21-year-olds or college students will want to read, however. It is a book for people in their 40s and older who, like Rimmington Fenn, no longer feel there is any hope of choosing for themselves. Sexuality in this novel is an issue of power and dominance, and its exploration of human relationships is somewhat like an X-rated version of A Tale of Two Cities. Here's a sample of what Bad Luck and Trouble is about: Fenn was in a dilemma about whether or not to go to Jenny's party. He was nervous about it. Jenny's party would be the first party to which he would feel obligated to attend since the incident. On the other hand, he was now twenty-five, and he had been out of town for several weeks. The party would be a good place to meet new people and explore his new freedom from the bonds of sexual commitment. Jenny had confided in him about her recent problems, and he promised her that she would not be alone. When Rimmington Fenn decided to go to the party, it was a bitter disappointment. The party was an orgy

Exogenous and spontaneous APA expression: nuclear and cytoplasmic localization in cultured fibroblasts. We showed previously that in cultured fibroblasts, (pro)renin is secreted and then re-internalized by endocytosis, in a process dependent on dynamin, and contributes to an increase in cGMP synthesis. The mechanisms involved are unclear. In this work, we examined the localization of (pro)renin and APA in cultured mouse and human fibroblasts and compared the distribution of both secreted and cellular (pro)renin with that of APA. Renin expression was induced with interleukin-1beta and TNFalpha. APA was identified with anti-APA antibodies. We showed that both (pro)renin and APA were secreted into the culture medium, as previously reported. They were mainly localized in the cytoplasm in mouse and human fibroblasts. However, in addition, a part of (pro)renin was detected in the nucleus and APA in the cytoplasm. Moreover, these subcellular localizations varied in different fibroblast types. This could represent the migration of APA into the cytoplasm and nucleus depending on the number and type of APA receptors. Modification of a CAVER electronic video recording system for use in mild closed head injury. A CAVER electronic video recording system was modified to provide more flexibility in recording, allowing for an optimal recording of mild closed head injury. The original CAVER (Zickler, M. (1994). Neurologic Clinics 8:545-554) used a VHS-type video recorder. This presented a number of difficulties for recording episodes. In this study, we modified the system by using a VHS-type video recorder and a TV-type monitor. The video system offers: ease of use; recording capability; precise time information; and compatibility with a VCR. The increased capability allows the recording and storage of longer video sequences, and collection of time-series data. The modified CAVER system is easy to use, requiring only the use of a VCR, and no additional video recording equipment. The system can be operated in a unilateral modality, but in this mode requires the use of a TV monitor. The system allows for the spontaneous execution of a number of experimental tasks by an individual. This allows the collection of time series data for the purpose of event-related or block
