Evoked by mechanical stimulation, injection of agonists (e.g., serotonin and bradykinin), and unloading of muscle cells, a transient increase in cytoplasmic free calcium concentration ([Ca2+]i) is often observed by measurement of cell-permeant aequorins as fluorescent Ca2+ indicators. We have used this method to investigate transients triggered by mechanical stimulation in the differentiating myotube, which were not previously described. The sensitivity of aequorins to intracellular Ca2+ and the lack of impurities in the aequorin solutions used prevent cAMP-dependent transients due to Ca2+ release from sarcoplasmic reticulum. When analyzed with an image-processing system, mechanical stimulation of myotubes by micropipette resulted in bright fluorescence in the

To investigate the effects of early invasive strategy for treating patients with ST-segment elevation myocardial infarction (STEMI) and high-risk patients with non-ST-segment elevation myocardial infarction (NSTEMI) who received primary percutaneous coronary intervention. All acute STEMI and NSTEMI patients who were enrolled and underwent primary percutaneous coronary intervention from January 2007 to July 2009 in our hospital were retrospectively analyzed. There were 94 patients with STEMI and 50 patients with NSTEMI. After primary percutaneous coronary intervention and dual antiplatelet therapy, 7 patients with STEMI were excluded due to the presence of cardiogenic shock or severe left ventricular dysfunction (Killip class \geq III). All patients were followed up by telephone. A total of 87 patients were enrolled and followed up, including 45 patients of STEMI and 42 patients of NSTEMI. Thirty-day and 12-month mortality rate were 4.5% and 7.4% in patients with STEMI and 2.4% and 3.6% in patients with N
