This adventure takes place in the fictional town of New York, Alaskan Territory, in 1861. Yankee James Riley has just arrived in the town. His party includes his sister Casey; his friend Lawrence; and his manager, Mary, who is a free Black woman. The party stops at the Calhoun Inn, in which business they find is booming. Most of the town's buildings are newly constructed or renovated. They also find James Riley's brother Jacob in the hospital, recovering from an illness. Jacob is visited by Mr. Jeffries, who is a friend of his and the deacon of the local church, and they compare and discuss the health of their families. In the Livery, the party is greeted by Jim Jeffries. He is surprised to see a woman as Jim's mother is a devout Christian woman. After making introductions, Jim takes the party to their hotel room, asking James Riley to book a train ticket at the usual place. The party then takes a walk to the dance hall, where they meet up with the crowd of people that are already there, and where the hotel gets crowded with people as well. Jim explains that the dance hall has a new prohibition law, which will be implemented the next day. The hotel owner, Mr. Lindsay, also runs the theater. James Riley tells the owner that he would like to book some seats there, to the pleasure of Mr. Lindsay. James Riley pays for a ticket and the two go to the theater. James Riley tells the theater staff to let the people in, except for the cowboys; as he doesn't want cowboys at the theater. The attendance for the performance is rather low as the locals have become timid due to the recent events. James Riley asks Mary to sing, as she was trained in music at her home in Alabama. Before she begins, James Riley tells her about a secret he learned while doing business in the territory, that there are recently digested men in Alaskan territory, which disgusts her and she gets up to leave the theater; after which James Riley takes her hand and asks her not to leave. After the last performance is over, James Riley, Mary and Casey go out to the backyard to chat. James Riley expresses his frustration with the restrictions of the territory, stating that he wants to go to his brother's farm. Mary asks him not to leave as he is vulnerable out there. James then asks her if she is alright and he asks her to give c9d1549cdd
