Share this: Stocks were lower Tuesday in light trading and after the longest US government shutdown in history ended. One of the biggest contributors to trading lower was after the US Federal Reserve left its key interest rates unchanged. Despite the Fed decision, the yield on the US 10-year T-note, which measures bond yields, was last seen at 2.5% — its highest level since September 10, 2008. The 2.5% level is the significant level used to confirm the start of a bear market. This could signal that there is a year-end rally in play, according to Mani Mazumdar, an equity strategist at TD Securities. “The Fed seems to have a wary eye on the economy,” Mazumdar told Bloomberg. “It’s hard to say what exactly is going on at the Fed, but my guess is that they might be slightly waiting for the market to trend a little more, at least in terms of not taking a set-in-stone position.” President Trump has already indicated that he could be interested in tightening the Fed’s monetary policy. “The Federal Reserve should get our interest rates down to near zero, or less, and we should then start to refinance China, and other parts of the world, along with the U.S.,” Trump said in a television interview Monday. “There’s zero chance that it comes out now that the Fed is suddenly going to reverse the policy. They are already talking about a move in June, but they may wait until Septembers’ annual policy meeting,” Mazumdar said. The day’s major moves were in the S&P 500 Index (SPX) and the Dow Jones Industrial Average (INDEX: ^DJI), which were both in the red by more than 0.5%. The major indexes were last seen at 2,988 and 26,000, respectively. The technology-heavy Nasdaq 100 (NDX) was last seen at 7,950. Mazumdar expects a potential rebound at year-end that could see the SPX close the year at 3,000. The financial measures of the S&P 500 lost over 2% in the week to October 4, while the S&P 1000 Financials (RF) lost 3% and the S&P 500 utilities (XLU) and the S&P 500 energy sector
