Detection and quantification of differentially expressed genes in the mammary glands of postpartum dairy cows. Differentially expressed genes were identified in mammary tissue of Holstein cows by differential display. An established technique for detection of RNA sequence was used to identify and quantify differentially expressed genes in mammary tissue of eight Holstein cows, 50 to 63 days postpartum. RNA was isolated from mammary gland tissue of the remaining glands. The cDNAs were amplified with anchor primers and gene-specific primers. Products were separated on the basis of the differential length of the cDNA sequences. The differential expression of a gene in the mammary gland tissue of one animal during a defined period of lactation was identified by comparing the bands obtained from the mammary gland with the bands obtained from the mammary gland tissue of the same animal 50 days postpartum. The Northern blot procedure was used for quantification of the differentially expressed genes. Twenty-nine bands representing 20 different genes were detected in the mammary gland tissue of all cows during the lactation cycle. Twelve genes were differentially expressed during early lactation. Seven of the 12 genes were identified as genes already known to be involved in lactogenesis. Moreover, three of the seven genes have been identified as regulators of milk synthesis. Most prominently, the expression of two genes (one of them known to be involved in milk synthesis) was induced after parturition and returned to the prepartum level in early lactation. Two other genes identified as regulating milk synthesis, but also involved in the regulation of cell proliferation, were also found to be differentially expressed during early lactation.

A report from Bloomberg on the failure of Xiaomi's first smartphone launch last month features an interesting tidbit: sources close to the company are saying that the team trying to build the next Mi phone are also working on creating an entirely new ecosystem for Android. There are already rumors about Xiaomi's Android ambitions, but the new report is much more specific, stating that the

The solution to most problems that arise in our day-to-day lives is to ask others for help. The catch is, you usually can't ask anyone if you're in a bind. In this game players take turns asking questions that other players must answer in as few or as many words as they can. If your opponent chooses the right answer, you lose the round. If you're lucky, your opponent guesses the right answer after a short time and you win. The game ends when all of the cards have been played.

HOW DOES IT PLAY

For the People consists of one deck of 40 questions. The questions are printed vertically in all of the four colors of the bingo background, bright yellow, green, red and blue. There are 10 Questions per column. The Questions include:

1. Where is my family?
2. Who is my crush?
3. Where is it that I'd like to be?
4. What is life's greatest lesson?
5. How do I get ahead in this city?
6. How do I win this round?
7. What I would most like to learn in my lifetime?
8. What do I like best about something?
9. Where's the nearest place I can find good food?

The rules are easy - ask questions, see how many answers you can think of in the given time and when the cards run out, who's done the most gets the cards!

HOW TO PLAY -WHAT TO SAY

You play the game by placing the question cards face down on the card table. Each player is given six cards. The total number of bingo cards that each player gets is subject to change. Everyone is assigned
