Childhood stress is a strong predictor of mood and anxiety disorders in adulthood. Monoamine transporters mediate the cellular uptake of serotonin (5-HT), norepinephrine (NE), and dopamine (DA). Recent studies suggest that epigenetic changes in monoamine transporters play an important role in the development of mood and anxiety disorders. However, little is known about the long-term impact of early life stress on DNA methylation of monoamine transporters in the brain. Here, we show that DNA methylation levels of serotonin transporter promoter (5-HTT) and norepinephrine transporter (NET) in the hippocampus and amygdala of adult mice were significantly higher in mice exposed to chronic mild stress from postnatal day 10 to 18 compared to nonstressed controls. NET methylation levels were also significantly higher in chronic mild stressed-mice that continued to receive stress for another 17 days (postnatal day 21 to 38). Our results indicate that childhood stress is associated with differential DNA methylation of monoamine transporters in adulthood and chronic stress may exacerbate its effects. In the design of semiconductor devices, such as integrated circuits, active and passive circuit components are fabricated in and on a semiconductor substrate. An exemplary circuit component is a transistor. Many transistors are formed on a semiconductor substrate. The transistors can be n-channel (NMOS) or p-channel (PMOS) transistor, and/or can be formed as field-effect transistors (FETs). The transistors can be used to implement many functions within the semiconductor device. Integrated circuits (ICs) may include a plurality of input, output, and/or input/output (I/O) lines that may couple various components, e.g., active circuits, passive circuits, sensors, and/or memory, of

New interest groups want to get a chance to make their case before the EPA issues final rules for greenhouse gas emissions from cars, trucks and other vehicles. The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration is working on standards to limit automobile emissions since gasoline burning vehicles contribute to smog and global warming. On Monday, the Natural Resources Defense Council filed a lawsuit with the Environmental Protection Agency to delay the greenhouse gas standards. NRDC argues the agency must hold a public meeting first to collect public comments. Greg Kehoe is with the Environmental Defense Fund. "It's important that any public rulemaking to cut down on global warming comes in front of the public because it's the public that has to live with these rules once they're in place. The public is the owner of these vehicles and we have to consult with them and understand their views," he said. So far the EPA has not made any comments. EPA spokesperson Adam Kapelski said the agency is currently in the process of drafting the regulation. "The EPA is in the process of developing a draft rule to address greenhouse gas emissions from automobiles. We are in the initial stage of preparing the rule. This process involves extensive research, which requires extensive review of a wide variety of information." Kapelski also said the agency does not have a timeline for publishing a final rule.
