Photoshop has various built-in channels such as the Background channel, an Adjustment Channel, a Layers channel, a Mask channel, a Levels channel, and a Curves channel. Photoshop includes numerous tools to edit these channels. The different channels are organized in a given image with the Background channel being the background of the image, the Adjustment Channel being the look of a specific part of the image, the Layers channel being layers that can be moved and merged together in an image, the Mask channel that allows specific objects to be masked out of the image, the Levels channel that makes adjustments to the image so that it becomes brighter or darker, and the Curves channel that is used to adjust the brightness and contrast of the image. Each channel has tools that are listed in Figure 3-1. In the following sections, we cover various tools included in Photoshop to make you more comfortable with the program. We also teach you how to use each tool individually to manipulate a photo. Figure 3-1: The channels include different tools to manipulate an image, plus a channel that stores the original image. Overlaying layers The Layers channels contains new, blank layers that can be placed over an image or moved around on the Layers panel. Figure 3-2 shows the Layers panel with a single layer (1) and another layer (2) in the Layers channels. Figure 3-2: Layers channels include additional blank layers. Creating or deleting layers Creating a new layer To create a new layer, choose Layer⇒New Layer or press Ctrl+N (Mac) or Command+N (PC). You can also add a layer by choosing Layer⇒Layer from the layers panel menu or pressing Ctrl+Shift+N or Command+Shift+N on the keyboard. The layer appears in the Layers panel and is displayed as a faint green line in the layer mask. After you create a layer, it's located in the Layer Channels under the layers panel. The Layer Channels list displays the layer name, and you can access a layer's settings by right-clicking it (Control-clicking on the Mac) or pressing the F key. The layers' autosave feature is enabled by default. If you accidentally lose a layer that's been working on, it saves a copy on your computer. The autosave feature stores a copy of the layer in the same location as

Relationship between tumor progression and antitumor immunity in a B16 melanoma model. The incidence of spontaneous tumors is higher in mice that have been immunized with tumor cells than in nonimmunized animals. The basis for this protection has remained enigmatic. In this study, the effects of immunization on a transplanted murine melanoma were examined. Female C57BL/6 mice were immunized with the B16F10 melanoma by local injection in the hind footpad with 10(5) viable tumor cells. The tumor challenge was preceded by a dose of whole-cell melanoma cells in Freund's adjuvant. As demonstrated by in vitro cytotoxicity assays, tumor immunity induced by this protocol was specific for the whole-cell melanoma cells. When immunized and challenged, mice did not reject a challenge dose of melanoma cells as assessed by histopathology. However, mice, which were immunized with 10(5) tumor cells and challenged with a 10-fold greater dose of tumor cells, rejected the melanoma challenge, and the percent of animals that rejected the challenge was significantly greater than in the nonimmunized control group. Therefore, immunity is in fact protective against the progression of a spontaneous tumor.

Q: storing static random number in a private object I have a method in my program which should return a static random number: `public static int getRandomNumber() { return (int) (Math.random() * RAND_MAX); }` This method is called in all of my classes. I thought the best approach would be to create a private object which stores the random number and methods for getting this number. However, this doesn't seem to work as when I call this method in my classes I get the same number twice. `private static int RAND_MAX = 50; public int getRandomNumber() { return RAND_MAX; }` How can I store the number `RAND_MAX` and be able to access it when I call the `getRandomNumber` method? A: Use a static variable, initialized in the class's constructor: `private static int RAND_MAX = 50; public int getRandomNumber() { return RAND_MAX; }` --- - name: "{{ test_inventory_group | quote }}" command: "{{ test_command_here }}"
