

HyperMotion Technology (HMT) incorporates multiple novel technologies in the revamped World Player movement system, resulting in many new features such as the Real Player Response engine. The PlayStation 4 Pro includes support for HMT, which delivers stunning graphics and fluid gameplay in FIFA 22. Substance gives you the ability to see which player is best at which type of play, allowing you to assess players to pick a formation and team for maximum team building success. Real Player Response (RPR) is a new feature for FIFA 22, with the aim to make player movement feel more natural and realistic. HMT enables this by collecting and combining player movement data from multiple players, allowing you to see and move the actual players on-screen. The Player Trajectory Engine collects and then combines the exact player movement data from every gameplay session when moving any player. This results in a smoother and faster-paced on-screen experience than before. With all this data, FIFA 22 can analyse player movement and compare it to what is done by players with the same position on the pitch. The result of this is that player paths on the pitch are more realistic, allowing players to play more naturally and smoothly on the pitch. FIFA Insight Engine features a more realistic movement system, so that players are always being “forced” to use the right mechanics, thereby controlling less of the movement. This means that player movement is more intuitive and rewarding to play. More refined passing and dribbling, and more advanced skill moves lead to even more fun and excitement on the pitch. FIFA 22 introduces Real-Player Impact, an all-new feature that more accurately captures the variety of movements that can be performed in a single football action. Two-player or team AI will be able to choose from more than 20 different movement behaviours. Individual players’ personal attributes (e.g., pace and stamina) can also be adjusted according to their playing position. This yields more of a natural and varied experience for the gamers. The Real Player Impact engine has its roots in advanced player simulation technology developed at EA Canada, the same engine used to create the Player Trajectory Engine and Universal Player Movements. FIFA 22 introduces brand new animation workflows, more detailed 3D models and smooth animations for ball, player and ball-line shapes. This ensures that the gameplay is more realistic, and that all the different movement types can be
