Roblox was founded by David Baszucki and Erik Cassel as a game making platform and content publishing system.[1] With the release of a game called Roblox in 2006, the platform received media attention, which led the company to expand its service.[2] The company was later acquired by its current owner and developer, Dental Powered, in December 2016.[3] The most widely used games on Roblox are referred to as build-it-yourself or drag-and-drop games; these games are built by users using a drag-and-drop interface and are playable on any Roblox-enabled device. It was originally a system for 2D platform games, but is now used for many different game genres, including MMOs, role-playing games, simulations, and shooters. As of October 2019, over 27 million games have been created on the platform. The company has undergone expansions and growth in 2010, 2015 and 2019 and currently operates out of office buildings in Manhattan, Houston and India. In 2019, Roblox launched a streaming platform called Twitch that let streamers play Roblox games. Website Statistics Search and Social Roblox Account To create an account on Roblox, users must first have an email address. This address must be verified for any change of contact information. The user is then directed to an authentication page where they will have to enter a password for their new account. If the email address is tied to a Facebook account, the system will attempt to match the Facebook password with the Roblox password, the result of which will be sent to the user via their preferred method. User profile Roblox uses its site in some part to verify the basic demographic information of its users; it is assumed that most users are 18 years old or younger. However, it also computes features, such as age and gender, using a self-reported age. There is no mandate that the age of a user is accepted as the actual age of the user, as the user may take advantage of the platform's features, such as the “older” page and the birthday wishes feature. Age The official Roblox profile includes age information, displayed alongside the user's gender. The user's birthdate is automatically filled in as the date of birth, and users can change it up to 10 years out from their actual birthdate (up to a maximum of the age of
