Technical Field The invention relates to bearings for journals and a journal spindle wherein said bearings are mounted on the journal at an angle to each other. In particular, the invention relates to self-aligning rolling element bearings wherein the inner and outer races are mounted at an angle on a shaft with the rolling elements rolling along this angle rather than axially. 2. Prior Art Many prior art bearings of this type have been proposed. Examples include the DC-344 manual bearing mount or the Altec PAE05 manual bearing mount which both are separate C.A.B. approved bearing mounts which are available from The Schrade Group. U.S. Pat. No. 3,333,720 discloses a self-aligning, conventional manual bearing mount, wherein the inner race is mounted directly on the journal while the outer race is secured to the shaft. The outer race is formed with internally spaced circumferentially extending flanges which extend at an acute angle with respect to the axis of the journal. The inner races are also formed with inwardly facing flanges which are mounted to the journal in abutment with these outwardly facing flanges. When the inner races are formed, the inner races are upset by way of an upsetting machine to an appropriate height such that the appropriate clearance between the rolling elements and the journal, and the bearing mounting surfaces of the inner races and the journal, are achieved. The flanges of the inner race were then formed by a punching operation and the inner races were then fixed in place by cold forming and finishing operations. The outer race was then mounted on the shaft to the portion of the flange adjacent the inner race and the journal portion of the bearing was then mounted on the bearing mount and the assembly was then tested. The disadvantages of the prior art include the necessity to expend extra labor and extra material to form the outwardly and inwardly facing flanges in the inner races
