We reviewed the current literature regarding the optimal treatment for primary epithelial-myoepithelial carcinoma. The best approach for high-risk myoepithelial carcinoma remains controversial. A 45-year-old male presented with a tumor on his right cheek, which was diagnosed as an epithelial-myoepithelial carcinoma. The patient underwent a wide local excision, reconstructive surgery, and permanent brachytherapy using iridium-192 after a simple mastectomy. Clinical follow-up was conducted for 6 years posttreatment. The patient was free of disease without severe complications. Brachytherapy is recommended for the treatment of epithelial-myoepithelial carcinoma because it is minimally invasive and provides good local control. However, it is difficult to obtain an ideal outcome without adequate surgical margin. Thus, close follow-up for recurrence is necessary. I would just like to do this with HTML and CSS, if that is possible. Is that possible? I've tried to do it with a span, but it doesn't work, because the CSS3 text-transform property affects the rendering of the span and in that case, the span itself is invisible. A: No, it's not possible to do in HTML alone. You will need a little Javascript for this. Here's one way to do it (uses jQuery): 6d1f23a050
