compared to placebo in the treatment of epileptic spasms. To compare the efficacy of a clobazam preparation with placebo in the treatment of epileptic spasms. A randomized, double-blind, controlled study was conducted in a reference child neurology center to evaluate the effect of clobazam in the treatment of epileptic spasms. Patients eligible for inclusion were children between 6 months and 24 months of age with epileptic spasms (20-40 spasms per day). The first 10 children who had completed the treatment were evaluated at study completion. Children with other forms of epilepsy were excluded. Children were randomly assigned to receive clobazam or placebo in a single daily dose for 12 days. Clobazam was administered orally at a dose of 3-5 mg/kg/day. A video recording of the child was taken before and after treatment to evaluate the epileptic spasms and, if present, quantify their frequency. Forty-six patients were included in the study, 23 were assigned to clobazam and 23 to placebo. There was a significantly greater reduction in the number of spasms recorded after treatment with clobazam than with placebo (P = 0.039). The reduction in the number of epileptic spasms was greater in the clobazam than in the placebo group (P = 0.035). An additional
