
Epson B42wd Adjustment Program

[quote=miker;5257]i have an epson 4900 printer that has seen light duty over its three year lifetime that has developed a defect in the middle third of the mk channel only. it has performed very nicely over its lifetime however the most recent printer head problem has not resolved despite several manual powerful paired head cleaning cycles effected through the printers lcd screen. i have taken it to a local certified epson repair center and after one week i was told that i needed a new printer head which would cost about $1,600.

unfortunately, they did nothing more than i had already tried to clear the blocked channel. since the machine has performed very well up until now and also since i had just purchased a full set of eleven carts for the printer i decided i would try to clear the head. in researching how to do this i came across the inkjet mall website and ordered eleven carts and a gallon of piezoflush to try to clear the blocked channel. i also downloaded and installed the recommended adjustment program(ap_4900), however, it is unclear which option to use in the adjustment program. the first thing to do after installing the software is to create a new user account on your printer. this is needed so that if something goes wrong with your printer (or during the process of the epson l360 adjustment software) your account will not be affected. once the adjustment program is extracted, you will see a file named: setup.exe. double click on this file and follow the onscreen instructions. close all your programs while performing this, to keep the computer running smoothly. but, before you open the adjustment program, you will need to know the current version of the printer. to do this, open the printer by clicking on the printer icon (located on the tray) and go to the lcd tab and the print tab. scroll down to the version field and note the version number.

ive tried everything i can think of to get the adjustment program to work but i just constantly get that communication error. ive not sought help from the suppliers of the adjustment program or from the makers of parallels yet as i have this feeling that they will both have me chasing my tails for days or weeks and i decided i just cant waste that much time getting it working if there was another option i.e purging the ink by printing. the first impression that you get after seeing these errors is that the present condition of your printer will not improve unless you call for the epson service engineer and most probably some hardware repair is overdue. however, none of these errors require actual hardware service, but these can be easily resolved by following some software procedures. to perform all these procedures, you require the original Epson I360 resetter program. now that you have installed the Epson software you need to know how to use it. you can navigate the software by moving to the menu on the right hand side. you should find some function that is new to you and look for a help button to see what it is and what it does. Epson provided us with a small number of units, to run Epson's adjustment software on. the software requires installation onto your computer. this can be performed using the CD. you should now have a choice of language on the adjustment software screen. English is set as default. press the "Settings" button to access the adjustment settings. at the top of the settings window is an adjustment settings button. this button will provide you with a menu, of which you can choose which printer, paper size, and set of inks you wish to adjust. if you do not see the menu, click on the adjustment settings button. 5ec8ef588b
