the colors for grass should be at the bottom of the color ramp to achieve the closest match to your monitors true color. while we didnt capture the color scheme, we suspect that it was mostly grass green with a bit of a yellowish tint to it. next, set the grass to overlay its color onto the ground as well. then, with the foreground grass black, select grass from the dropdown menu in the default tray, and change the colors by clicking on the grass. once finished, it should look like the photo below. make it sunny. now its time to fix our sky. using the materials tab, you can change the sky color and opacity to create the look you want. we recommend using a deep blue color that is more of a cyan. next, give the sky a layer mask as well. with this effect mask in place, we can then add some simple sky particles to set the scene in the right direction. once these are in place, you can add some clouds in the scene with the addition of a few basic clouds. you can add more clouds, or even clouds and particles for a more textured sky if you want, but this simple setup allows you to start creating a sky to make the scene look good. next, bring out your sun. select the sun from the material drop-down menu in the default tray, and change its color to white and the blending mode to multiply. using the anchor window, add a few basic sun particles to simulate your suns light. then, make a layer mask on the sun, with the suns light visible, and in the layer mask, use a soft brush to paint over the sky at the top of the sun, once this is done, you can change the blending mode from multiply to screen. then, hide the suns particles until you are ready to reveal them, otherwise you willnt be able to see the suns light because you will be filling the area where the suns particles are.
