@Fujifilm - it's time to take a seat and realize that your sensor can be a great tool, ESPECIALLY when it comes to Portra. You set the standard and improve upon it. Why not help Adobe Lightroom bring out the best result possible in camera and other raw formats? That is the path you should be taking. Listen to what your users want and provide that for them. Help them get what they've been working for. After all, you wouldn't turn your back on users because of ridiculous patent lawsuits. I have zero problem with your sensor technology or firmware or like you said a "small light leak" that you guys reported in 2004. It's a small price to pay for what is now the best RAW converter in the world. You have a big opportunity to help Adobe Lightroom remain the top RAW converter by helping them solve that issue and others. Please, don't by putting us to sleep and thinking you can develop technology and sensors all on your own. I need Lr to continue to improve and to be the top RAW converter at it is today. You cannot ignore this opportunity. And waiting on others to do it for you won't be good for anyone. If you don't want to help or don't know how, that's fine. But know that other people like me will step up to the plate and provide what you guys should be providing. We don't expect royalty to Adobe nor do we want your help. I'm not exactly sure if that bothers you or not, but we're perfectly fine with that. But I do expect your camera to stop playing games and tell Lr the truth. That is you can't change it and we're on to your tricks. If not, then stop playing games and you'll be fine.

For example, if you visit www.adobe.com, you should see the web-based version of Photoshop running in the latest version of the Chrome browser (or Safari if you prefer macOS). However, if you were browsing the web on a different device, you would see a different browser, which might or might not be able to run the latest Adobe Photoshop. Note that if you are using a desktop monitor, the browser needs to support the web-mode that Adobe Photoshop is running in. On macOS, that would be Apple inspector. On Windows, that would be the Photos app. The web-based Adobe

Photoshop also needs specific hardware capabilities to work. If you are using a Mac, you need an Intel or AMD processor with a supported processor architecture. If you are using an iPhone, iPod Touch, or iPad, you need at least iOS 5.0. Adobe has been working with web developers, both in the industry and on Apache Open Source projects, on this porting effort. While the initial porting effort, in essence, consisted of taking the Photoshop code base from the desktop product and adapting that code to run in the browser, the evolving features, such as Lightroom and the Web-based Creative Cloud, make it increasingly a different product. A question a lot of new designers ask is, "How do I mix up my design?" It can be a very difficult question to answer. When it comes to design, the easiest way to mix up the design is by using layers. When we first started out, we learned the Photoshop and built a style guide that we continuously followed across the design process. The biggest problem with the style guide: it's too rigid. By repeating many conventions, we start to just get used to the design and on top of that, once the work is completed, we do not know what else could be done. We employ many conventions to ensure that we can do most things in Photoshop on our own. 933d7f57e6
