Nuclear factor 1 (NF-1) is a transcription factor that plays an important role in cell proliferation and differentiation. It is a multifunctional protein that contains three classical zinc finger motifs and a C-terminal helix-loop-helix (HLH) motif. The HLH domain of NF-1 functions as a DNA-binding domain. There are three sites in the NF-1-binding sequence (5'- CCGTTTGGGA-3') and these three sites have different capacities for binding NF-1. The present study is to study the structure-function relationship between the NF-1-binding sequence and its interaction with NF-1 using molecular dynamics (MD) simulations. The inter-residue interactions of the three sites with each other and with NF-1 are investigated. The results show that the zinc fingers and HLH are not responsible for the specific interaction between f988f36e3a
