This software has three main categories

The first category is Photomerge, where you creatively blend several photos together into one. You can also remove the background, add text and other enhancements. True makes it easy to remove any traces of editing.

The second category is Batch, a suite of tools that lets you make complex photo adjustments quickly in one step. Batch, for example, can change the white balance, exposure, saturation, and contrast. Batch lets you produce amazing-looking high-quality prints. Sketch creates vector graphics and text with high precision. Presets let you make custom adjustments right from the program. The edit queues, which we'll talk about in a minute, help you control which edits you're working on

The third category is Adjustments, which are modifications of individual image properties, such as white balance, saturation, contrast, clarity, brightness, and so forth. Adjustments let you make further adjustments to the raw editing tools, beyond what the buttons on the toolbar will do. Most of us use the presets first—and the adjustments last.

While you use Adjustments and Presets to make precise changes, you use Selective to make more Invisible changes. Then you use Paint Brush to make complex adjustments to True or bake an all-important Clarity adjustment into your images.

Save for Web and Devices converts the file to the format you need for use on the Web or e-mail.

Q: iAds App FC in the Simulator but not on Device I've setup and AdBannerView via Interface Builder, and it works great in the simulator, but when i open it on my device it shows up as an empty "grey square" (the simulator, running on 3.2, has no issues with the app). Here's the code: - (void)bannerViewDidLoadAd:(ADBannerView *)banner{ banner.frame = CGRectMake(220, 45, 220, 96); [banner setBackgroundColor:[UIColor clearColor]]; [self.view addSubview:banner]; banner.delegate = self; } I added this delegate method to make sure that the banner loads from the didFailToReceiveAdWithError method. - (void)adView:(ADBannerView *)view didFailToReceiveAdWithError:(NSError *)error { NSLog(@"didFailToReceiveAdWithError!"); } Any ideas? A: Run your app in debug mode and break at the NSLog line. You should see some error in the console. Have you set a delegate for your AdBannerView? If not have you set the delegate for your view? I would be okay with Rudy being the starter. It's just hard to tell without seeing him as a Trojan.
