To compare the clinical presentation, management and outcomes of children presenting with self-harm and non-suicidal self-injury (NSSI) to a central South Australian emergency department over a 9-month period. Data were collected for all children (n=337) aged 3-15 years with self-harm (n=164) or NSSI (n=173) who presented to a major metropolitan hospital emergency department over a 9-month period. There was no difference in the demographic or health characteristics of the two groups. However, children who presented with self-harm were significantly more likely to be depressed (P=0.03) and to have psychiatric morbidity (P=0.006). Psychosis was the only psychiatric morbidity more commonly found in those presenting with self-harm (P=0.05), whereas anxiety was more frequently seen with NSSI (P=0.05). Children presenting with NSSI had longer hospital stays and were more likely to be admitted to an inpatient unit. Both groups had a similar number of admissions for psychiatric assessment, however, self-harm children were admitted significantly less often (P=0.02). Children with NSSI were also more likely to be seen by a psychotherapist (P=0.01). Self-harm was associated with depression, anxiety and psychosis, but NSSI was primarily associated with anxiety and psychotherapy.Select Agency Agrees to Pay Family $4.2 Million to Settle Lawsuit Posted on Tuesday, August 30, 2017 by Paul Joseph This Is What Your Email Diagram Revealed: Planned Parenthood For many conservative Christians, the Supreme Court's Roe v. You cannot write a paper without technical skills. All kinds of research have some special techniques or methods that you need to know. You have probably heard about the APA style, the grammatical rules that govern English. Most writers use it. However, there is a sub-set of academic papers called technical papers, and for these, you need something more. Such as How to Write a Technical Paper. Why Technical Papers? Technical papers are also called the technical research papers. As we say in the United States, it is also known as the Applied Research papers. Now, it is a fact that technical papers focus on things like mathematics, science, and mathematics, among others. But when it comes to technical papers, they are also used for general engineering-based papers, or statistical papers and such. But the fact is, you are required to write a technical paper before you can graduate in an engineering-based college. This is why writing a technical paper is necessary for all undergraduates. How to Write a Technical Paper Now, to write a technical paper, you need to understand the various technical writing strategies. The APA format is the standard form of academic papers. However, for technical papers, you should learn to write it in a different way. Here are the key points on how to write a technical paper. 1. Know what to Write To write a technical paper, you must first know what to write. In technical papers, the first section is usually the Background, which gives you the information on the background of the topic or research that you are writing about. You may also know that this section is the longest part of the technical paper. So, what do you need to write? f988f36e3a
