Lastly, Apple's Pencil technology may not influence users to buy an iPad Pro. But with their ability to take sketches with a pressure sensitive input device as a pencil and the features the Apple Pencil brings, it definitely cannot be denied. It is quite likely that a lot of those who subscribed to CNN or Musicians Today or Forbes may have been left in the dark about the update because their editors and researchers are writing about the topic covered by a heavily edited "Newspaper". The iPad Pro's Pencil and a high-end camera, in conjunction with what's possible in the wildly popular Adobe Photoshop, are the recipe for a new photography workflow. Legendary photographer George Eastman once said, "The most important skill in a photographer is not his eye, but his ability to synthesize the best from his own eye and the best available from others." Aside from the cool Pencil features, the most stunning is probably the fact that every tool in the Photoshop collection has a truly iPad-centric workflow. You can see the tool tips and the action menu just as you would on any Apple iPad Air or iPad Pro. One of my favorite features is the ability to share a link to any photo, which will update almost any page to include the image. Social media sites such as Facebook and Pinterest, in particular, allow you to share a photo on the fly as a native link to the photo. I used this new ability in Facebook to share my logo in a press release (which you can find here) and tracked the amount of time it took to see it shared instantaneously.
