Here is a good point from a test: If you're reusing saved filters from old versions of Photoshop or Lightroom (or Automator), you won't save the new versions of these filters. I didn't know about this, and just forget checked "Share Settings" for filters after upgrading to the new version.

Other than that, the new version is still one of the best transition solutions. It's only problem is that you have to pay more (US$49.99) to upgrade to it. Glad I bought Apple software a couple of years ago. I've been using PS since CS2, and everything is great (and I'm 99% of the time happy). However, the way that the upgrade process is handled is very sub-optimal. Having to click "Home" then "Upgrade" then "Upgrade and Restart" instead of just having one choice of "Upgrade" and that's it, would make a significant difference. I just upgraded to LR5.2 and added LR learning for my Christmas present. I had downloaded the Mac app for the first time and that's about the time I realized the learning site is not https so we all have to be careful of what we read and click. So I am not real pleased with the site. There aren't many new features for the new program because they are still working to get everything working right? I agree. I'm glad other than "the way it is done" — there are lots of great things in Lightroom that have not changed except for the new version upgrade. I already have all my images and presets on this drive and running Lightroom 4. I've been using Lightroom ever since PS CS2 came out and now it's available as a standalone app. I really don't see any reason to have to purchase another copy of Lightroom, but I guess it is what it is if you want to continue to own an Apple product.
