I am writing a method that takes a java.io.FileReader as an input and returns a byte array. Here is my code: public static byte[] readFile(java.io.FileReader f) { if(!f.hasNext()) return null; return f.nextByte().toString().getBytes(); } Now when I run the above code in Eclipse, the following error is generated: `Cannot convert from 'java.io.FileReader' to 'bool' Now, I'm very new to Java. However, it is clear that the above line says f.hasNext is false. Can someone explain to me what I'm doing wrong here? Thanks in advance A: Can someone explain to me what I'm doing wrong here? You are checking if your file reader is empty: if(!f.hasNext()) This check if the file has any data and you are assuming it has none. This will be false if the file is empty. Instead you need to check whether the file has any data: if(f.read() != -1) A: In java.hasNext() returns false if the end of the FileReader is reached. Try reading the.read() method. It returns the number of bytes read, which can be used to get byte[] of file data. You may need to
