Adobe Photoshop CC 2018 is here, and it's pretty much what we expected: a substantial refresh that can make the software a bit more effective for some photographers. It makes changes to the Creative Cloud and subscriptions, as well as features and the LibreArt foundation. It's a solid upgrade, though not perfect. I also missed the old look and feel of the software, which has been replaced with a pretty new look and haptic controls that are very smooth to use. This new software also has some new features including conversion of PSD files into AI-powered files. AI already converts images for you, but not in PSD format. I have heard about AI for PSD files but wasn't sure the quality was there yet. Pretty tricky to do. This new feature takes it a little further. You no longer need to take a PSD file to a Mac or Android device to open it. The AI convert PSD file to a JPEG, a PNG or a GIF. And the AI will convert the PSD file to a GIF if you not configure something else. So I can assign an AI conversion as a default action when creating a new project? What about opening and saving PSD files? Adobe promises a future upgrade to AI that can open and save directly from the AI generated image. After switching to the company's Creative Cloud program with the Creative Cloud's debut on October 1, 2013, Canon, Apple, Google, and Adobe are the biggest players in the professional photography industry. And now, there's a new big player - Samsung.
