Like other CC apps in the Creative Cloud family, Photoshop CC is all about the cloud. Even as you're working on one project, Photoshop images can be cropped, cropped, or moved anywhere you like thanks to Photoshop's one-click feature. The other great part, of course, is the ability to collaborate right from your home screen. That, combined with the ability to preview your edits before putting them out the door, makes for a near-perfect package. For those of you that were still hoping for the Final Cut Pro 10.2 update to be pushed through to your devices, you're in luck this time around. Version 20.2 of FCP X has been released to the public Beta, and you can download it here. The developer says via the FCP thread on the 9to5mac forums that following the update, you should be able to use the "Find and Replace with Fuzzy Granularity" tool found in the "Find and Replace" sidebar within FCP X just fine as it has been since the FCP X 10.2 beta version 2. You can also expect minor updates to look in the database which you have chosen as your collection. FCP X should also be able to use the Multi-Touch gestures available on newer devices. While it's impossible to review all of Adobe Photoshop CC's features, the layout and interface remain as rich as they've ever been, and the tools just as industry-leading. While some of the AI edits do need some time to develop, provided you've got a powerful enough machine (see Compatibility section) to run Photoshop, you should be impressed by how smooth the editing actually is.

The idea of running software as complex as Photoshop directly in the browser would have been hard to imagine just a few years ago. However, by using various new web technologies, Adobe has now brought a public beta of Photoshop to the web. Adobe DASH is an open source project that currently supports a limited Photoshop experience, focused primarily on support for working with DASH assets . It currently doesn't support all features of Photoshop (e.g. size of the canvas, discontinuities in output file, size of layers and paths, etc....).
